So a duck egg is obviously much larger than a quail egg. A quail egg is higher in cholesterol because of its white-to-yolk ratio. But it still has the same amount of protein in it as the chicken egg. This means that a duck egg still packs 3 grams more of protein per quail egg. Goose eggs.

Now, a goose egg is a bit of a different story.

Traditional Toulouse sausages are all pork, and are minced by hand rather than ground — a fine option I do myself from time to time. But the sausage is also wonderful made with duck mixed with fatty pork, then run through your coarsest die on your food grinder. (Incidentally, this is a great recipe for snows or Canada geese.)
