The Tanner in the original One Night Ultimate Werewolf, who has to die in order to win and in doing so prevents the werewolves from winning, is a fun role. I really like the idea of additional teams, and in creating the Assassin, that's what you get: a new "team" of one that can win only if his target, whom he's given the Mark of the Assassin, dies.

14 new roles? The profundia page says there are only 12 in the game. Still, I love the Assassin. My friends and I have been playing with an almost identical role that we created ourselves since before Daybreak was announced - we just had our character (the Hitman) look at a player's card and have that role be the target (meaning if the role was switched they had to find out who now had the card).
